Section D

Comprehensive Answer / Case / Situation Analysis Questions:[4 × 5 = 20]

22. Analyze the following case carefully and answer the questions that follow: Himalayan Organics, a Nepali skincare company, recently launched a line of herbal beauty products such as face wash, moisturizer, and sunscreen made from natural Himalayan herbs. Their primary target was young urban consumers, especially students and working women, who are increasingly health-conscious and motivated to use safe, natural, and eco-friendly products. Many consumers were motivated to try these products because they wanted healthier skin, believed in the benefits of natural herbs, and wanted to avoid harmful chemicals present in foreign brands. Social recognition and the desire to "look good naturally" also acted as strong motives. The company provided free samples in shopping malls and beauty salons, allowing customers to test the product. Positive results and word-of-mouth created reinforcement, and repeat purchases showed that consumer learning had taken place. Some consumers perceived Himalayan Organics as "authentic and affordable," while others believed that "foreign brands are still superior." Their perception was shaped by product packaging, advertisements featuring popular celebrities, and past experiences with herbal products. Consumers with outgoing and modern personalities associated themselves with international brands, while those with environmentally conscious and health-oriented personalities relied more on Himalayas. The company positioned its brand personality as natural, trustworthy, and youthful to match the target group's self-image. Over time, positive attitudes developed among loyal users through repeated satisfaction, health benefits, and eco-friendly branding. However, a segment of consumers still carried negative attitudes due to skepticism about the effectiveness of local brands, which came from family influences, peer opinions, and exposure to foreign advertisements.

Questions:

- What role did consumer motivations play in influencing buyers of Himalayan Organics products? Discuss.
- Explain how consumer learning occurred in this case. Identify the principal elements of learning reflected in the strategy.
- Discuss how consumer perception and personality influenced brand choice in this case.
- "Consumer attitude is shaped by both personal experiences and external influences". Justify this statement with reference to the case.
