

2024

Bachelor in Business Administration

Course Title: Consumer Behaviour

Code No: MKM201 Semester: 7th Semester

Full Marks: 60 Pass Marks: 24 Time: 3 hours

Candidates are required to answer the questions in their own words as far as practicable.

Section A

1. What is consumer behavior?
2. Differentiate between consumer and organizational buying.
3. What do you understand by problem recognition by consumers?
4. Point out the types of consumer buying.
5. Differentiate between internal and external search.
6. State the difference between conjunctive and disjunctive decision rules.
7. Write down the remedies for dissonance reduction.
8. State the sources of consumer motivation.
9. How do you think culture would influence consumer behavior?
10. Differentiate between short term and long term memory.
11. What are the sources of consumer information? Explain.
12. Discuss evaluative criteria and its measurement.
13. State and explain product disposition methods.
14. What is personality? Explain the types of consumer personality.
15. What do you mean by reference group influences? Describe the nature and degree of influences.
16. How does the subculture influence consumer behavior? Discuss.
17. Read the following case carefully and answer the questions that follow: Kellogg Company has distribution in more than 200 countries and yet is still "unknown to half the world's population," according to Michael Hess, Kellogg's CEO. Hess plans to change that. The challenge is made greater by the presence of aggressive competition in many developed and developing markets. According to Hess, a global brand requires a core position strategy or product benefit that will work in multiple countries. The key ideas of two of Kellogg's global or near-global brands are described by Hess in the following paragraphs: Corn Flakes
The basic positioning concept for Corn Flakes is simple, unadulterated food that tastes surprisingly good. This concept also has universal appeal. It is typically the first product we introduce in a new market. It is the foundation of our line, and it is the world's most popular cereal. Wheat Flakes The value proposition for Wheat Flakes is the health benefits of fiber in the diet. This proposition does not have universal appeal without development. The concept of the value of fiber in the diet is new to many countries and is often resisted. According to Hess, Kellogg Company began a massive campaign to countries where the benefits of fiber were not widely accepted. The campaign varied across countries due to differences in the attitudes of local medical and nutritional professionals. However, the basic approach was to educate and support the medical and nutritional community in each country. As a country's experts became convinced of the value of fiber, they told their story in their academic press, the general press, and in public service announcements. Today, despite competition from many other high-fiber cereals, Wheat Flakes is one of the top 5 cereals worldwide.

Questions:

- What type of innovation would cold cereal be to a country not accustomed to this type of food? Explain.
- What values would support and what values would harm the chances of Kellogg succeeding with cold cereal in Nepal? Give your arguments.
- What are the factors to be considered in developing a marketing program to market Kellogg's cold cereals in Nepal? Discuss.
- Evaluate the communication process Kellogg used to gain acceptance for Wheat Flakes.